Title of the Website: MovieHub

Description: The website that I made is about an online movies-streaming website that includes 8 different types of genres. Action, Comedy, Drama, Fantasy, Horror, Mystery, Romance, and Thriller. I also made a favicon for the title bar which can be found on the drive that I have linked. I also made different websites depending on the genres that include 6 more movies to choose upon. I also include a footnote for some movie-type news. Hope you enjoy browsing my website!

The screenshot shows the Visual Studio Code interface with the Drama.html file open. The code is a combination of CSS and HTML. The CSS part includes styles for the header, title, paragraph, border, body, and various links. The HTML part contains a header, a title, a paragraph, and a list of movie links. The status bar at the bottom shows the file path, line number (Ln 76), column number (Col 1), and encoding (UTF-8). The bottom right corner shows the file name (Drama.html) and the current tab index (2).

The screenshot shows the Visual Studio Code interface with the Horror.html file open. The code is a combination of CSS and HTML. The CSS part includes styles for the header, title, paragraph, border, and various links. The HTML part contains a header, a title, a paragraph, and an ordered list of links. The status bar at the bottom shows the file path, line number (Ln 43), column number (Col 1), and encoding (UTF-8). The bottom right corner shows the file name (Horror.html) and the last modified date (mtm2020 [zosmf]).

The screenshot shows the Visual Studio Code interface with the file 'Romance.html' open. The code editor displays the HTML and CSS for a movie hub website. The CSS includes styles for the header, title, paragraph, border, body, and various links. The HTML structure includes a header, a title section with a 'Romance Movies' heading, a paragraph of movie links, and a footer with a note about school purposes.
